Fayetteville Public Library adds Lynda.com to digital offerings

Fayetteville Public Library announced today that library card holders can now access video tutorials through Lynda.com, a LinkedIn Company. The service can be accessed via the library's website.

With Lynda.com, users can access thousands of video courses on a large variety of professional topics. Users can follow learning paths – collections of tutorials curated by Lynda that focus on a specific subject, e.g. “Become a Small Business Owner” or “Become a Photographer” – or search Lynda's library for specific content related to management, computer programming, media applications, art projects, and more.

Cardholders should note that library access to Lynda is restricted to web browsers, as the Lynda app currently does not support public library access.

The addition of access to Lynda.com follows other recent additions to the library's digital collections, including streaming video from hoopla digital and streaming music from Freegal. The library has made a priority of increasing its collection size and accessibility in 2017.
