Fayetteville Public Library increases internet speed, capacity

Fayetteville Public Library recently upgraded its internet connection to increase both speed and capacity of the library's network. Library users should begin immediately noticing an increase in download performance.

Additionally, the library upgraded its public wireless infrastructure providing support for many additional devices. This upgrade should prevent patrons from being denied access to the library wireless network during peak usage times.

The upgrade follows a recent call from Fayetteville Mayor Lioneld Jordan for wider availability of high-speed internet connections throughout the community. The city recently announced its hopes to form a task force with library Executive Director David Johnson and Fayetteville Public Schools Superintendent Dr. Matthew Wendt focused on digital inclusion, or ensuring that local families of all incomes have access to fast, reliable internet service.
